

Beware of scammers asking for your credentials or wanting to access your system.

"Yesterday I got a call from someone with a very strong east-Indian accent informing me that because I am such a good Bell customer they want to be sure I would not go to the competition (as apparently many have done) by lowering my fees by 50% for the next 6 months. No strings attached. Because I am such a nice loyal customer. Now we just need to verify a few details, so tell me, what is your..... Here I hang up.

"Today I again get a call from Bell. Again a strong east-Indian accent. Poor connection with bad echo on the line. This time they tell me they are installing Bell fiber in my neighborhood, and unfortunately they will be disconnecting the current wired phones. No problem though, because I am such a great customer, they will be providing me with a special super fast new router free of charge!. Says she will now hand me over to a tech guy who has to verify my computer's compatibility by logging into my current system..... Here I hang up again. BTW, I have fiber already for nearly two years, but I guess they wouldn't know that right?

"What will tomorrow bring?"

(from an OPCUG member)